STATUS of WOMEN in FINLAND in 1935.

Franchise and Eligibility.

The new Constitution of 1906 established complete political equality in giving Parliamentary Franchise and Eligibility to all citizens, to women as to men, at the age of 24.

According to the Municipal Laws of 1917 women citizens have the same rights as men to vote for Municipal Councils and Local Governments at the age of 21. They may also be elected as Local Authorities.¹

Church of Finland.

The Ecclesiastical Law of 1869 restricts women's rights considerably. Women may attend vestry meetings at the age of 24. They have the right to vote for and be elected Members of Church Councils and Representatives of the Congregation at Church Congresses. Women may also take part in the election of Church officials in the same way as men, but they are not eligible for and have so far not been allowed to take Holy Orders. The Law mentioned above implies that a person appointed to the Ministry of the Church must be a man, and consequently women have not been ordained.

¹ A new Law was passed in January 1936 regarding the Protection of Children and the Social Welfare of tramps and drunkards. This Law states that at least one member of the Municipal Committee in charge of these services must be a woman.

Nationality.

A woman Finnish national retains her Rights of Citizenship on marriage with a foreigner as long as she lives in the country, unless she renounces them explicitly.

If residing abroad or leaving the country a woman married to an alien loses her Rights of Citizenship in Finland, as soon as she acquires another nationality.

A legitimate child has the nationality of its father, whereas a child born out of wedlock has the same nationality as its mother.

Through a later marriage between the parents, an illegitimate child obtains the nationality of its father.

State Service.

A woman's Right to enter the Service of the State is granted by the Law of April 1926. According to this all professions and posts, with certain exceptions for the Ministry of Defence, the Police, the Customs etc., are open to women as to men. In regard to official duties the Law states some positions are to be filled either by a man or a woman. The following positions are to be held by women only:

- 1) Assistant second vice-director of a prison where women are kept.
- 2) Warden, Foreman, Teacher, Jailer, and Nurses for women prisoners.
- 3) Inspector of Domestic Economy in the Agricultural Department.
- 4) State Inspector of Gymnastics and Hygiene for girls, Teachers of Gymnastics for girl students at the University and girls' schools, and Headmistresses of and Teachers of Gymnastics at training colleges for women teachers.
- 5) Certain posts in the Ministry of Defence, the State Medical and the Factory Inspection Departments, which by their titles are indicated as being for women.

The following posts are for men only:

- 1) All posts in the Ministry of Defence with the exception of certain office clerks.
- 2) Chairman, Member of and Prosecutor in a Court-Martial.
- 3) Director, Business Manager, Teacher, Foreman, Jailer, Warden etc. in prisons for men.

- 4) Governor of a Province, Deputy Governor, Chief of Police, Chief of Detective Police, District Bailiff, Sheriff's Officer, Police Constable.
- 5) Director of a Custom House in coastal districts, Surveyor of Customs, Engineer in the Coast Guard, Frontier Inspector, Custom House Watchman etc.
- 6) Teacher of Gymnastics for men at the University, Teachers of training schools for men and at boys' schools, State Inspector of Gymnastics for boys.
- 7) District chiefs of Forests and Forest Keepers.
- 8) Engine-driver, Fireman, and Guard on the State Railways.
- 9) Chief Factory Inspector and other Factory Inspection posts which by their title are indicated as being for men.
- 10) Board of Navigation Officials except certain office clerks.
- 11) Marine Research Institute Officials with the exception of those in the chemical department.

Positions of Trust.

What is stated in the Law of 1926 regarding women's right to enter the State Service also applies to women's right to hold positions of trust.

Municipal Service.

The Law of April 1926 regarding women's right to enter the State Service also applies to holders of positions under the Local Authorities, whom Government officials appoint or legalize.

The Law mentioned above makes no distinction between married and unmarried women. A woman married under the old Marriage Law of 1889 is, however, obliged to produce a guarantee of her husband, when she applies for a state appointment where she would handle public funds, that he will be responsible for any deficit in her accounts.

Woman as Officeholder and in Private Enterprise.

Women are by Law given opportunities to hold offices and carry on industry and trade in the same way as men.

The Inheritance Law applies equally to women and men.

The Legal Position of Married Women.

The New Marriage Law of 1929 removed all the obstacles that had limited the legal and personal rights of a married woman. The tutelage of the husband over his wife was abolished and they are placed upon an equal footing as to rights and duties. Both are as far as possible liable to contribute towards the benefit of the family. The wife has the same authority over the children as the father, and her work at home is considered a contribution. If either husband or wife neglects the duty to allow the other a reasonable share of income for the maintenance of the family and education of the children, the Court may order a certain proportion of the income of the party in fault to be paid to the other direct. A married woman may seek sources of income outside the home. Husband and wife have the same rights to the use of their earnings and income and the disposal of their property. The wife may enter into financial transactions and carry on business and trade in the same way as the husband. She has the right to plead and prosecute in court. Each partner is responsible for his own debts only, whereas the previous Law of 1889, still in force for those who married before 1930, enacts mutual responsibility. The tutelage of the husband over his wife is regarded as abolished by the new Law also for women married before 1930. Certain improvements are also being introduced as to a married woman's right to control inherited property, but the restrictions regarding the husband's right to administer also this are still in force for women married before 1930. In consequence of this a woman married under the old Law is obliged to produce a guarantee of her husband, if she applies for an appointment where she would handle public funds, that he will be responsible for any deficit in her accounts.

Husband and wife are legally given the same right to make marriage settlements. They have also equal rights to make wills.

The Unmarried Mother and Illegitimate Child.

The Law of 1922 entitles the unmarried mother to maintenance by the father of her child during the period when she is incapacitated through confinement.

A child born out of wedlock is in the same legal position to its mother as a legitimate child. The mother is the guardian of the child. If the father acknowledges the child as his own, it obtains the same legal rights on the paternal side (except nationality) and the father is obliged to support the child up to the age of 17 and to provide even longer for its education.

Labour Legislation for Women.

Labour legislation in Finland has hitherto followed the principle that adult men and women need equal protection against the dangers created by the growing industrialism. All provisions concerning working hours, hours for meals, periods of rest, extra work, holidays, etc. apply equally to every employee of 18 years of age and over, independent of sex.

In Finland's Industrial Labour Act of 1917 the word "night" means the time from 9 p.m. to 6 a.m. and work in one shift during that time is prohibited for all adult men and women. If divided into two shifts it may be continued until 11 p.m. at a maximum of eight hours for each shift with half-an-hour's rest in each. The work can continue day and night if arranged in three shifts of a maximum of eight hours each, which shifts must relieve each other regularly and be changed every week. With the permission of the Ministry of Social Affairs workers may be employed during part of the night even when it is not divided into shifts as above, if the technical character of the work, the time of year, or traffic conditions so demand. As mentioned before these regulations are the same for adult men and women.

Special regulations for women workers only exist in very few cases. The Industrial Labour Act mentioned also prohibits the employment of women in lubricating running engines or transmission plants. Owing to the ratification of some International Draft Conventions, a few special rules have been added. Thus since 1929 women under the age of 20 are not allowed to work on cargo ships and no women as seamen in Ocean traffic. Likewise all females are prohibited from painting work of an industrial character involving the use of white lead, sulphate of lead, or any other products containing these pigments. Women under the age of 21 are not to be employed in loading and unloading vessels running between Finnish harbours and foreign ones, nor in Finnish harbours or certain parts of them as defined by the Ministry of Social Affairs.

The Act relating to Industrial Labour prohibits the employment of women during the first four weeks after confinement. The Shop Act prohibits the employment of female shop-assistants and clerks during the first six weeks after confinement. Women in an advanced state of pregnancy may not, according to these laws, be employed in work which in their condition might be injurious. No allowances are given during their absence from work. No prohibitions exist concerning married women.

Occupation of Women.

Nearly 60 % of the population of Finland live on agriculture and the same proportion of the self-supporting Finnish Women are occupied in agricultural work. The last official statistics give nearly 500,000 women as engaged in agriculture. Of these about 300,000 are owners of land.

About 100,000 earn their living in the industrial and commercial field.

Educated women predominate as Public and High School teachers, trained hospital nurses, post, telegraph and telephone office employees, commercial and cooperative bank clerks, dentists, official tourist guides.

The total number of women gainfully occupied in Finland is over 700,000, i.e. about 40 % of the number of people engaged in earning their living. (For details see the tables.)

Population 3,720,000.

In Government, Municipal and Local Government Service the scales for payment and conditions apply equally to all employees, independent of sex. The same principles are followed in private schools. Government posts are given for life up to 67 years of age, and pensions granted by Law equally for men and women in the same posts.

In private enterprises women are generally paid lower salaries, in some branches only half of those given to men for similar duties.

Finnish women have so far not gained the highest judiciary or administrative positions, though they are legally entitled to opportunities of advancement. Women have taken the highest university degrees, but as the Law regarding Women's Rights to enter the Service of the State was passed only in 1926, women have been unable to secure all the necessary qualifications for advancement, among them years of service. In the field of Education women have long had equal standing with men.

In private undertakings the lower posts are generally given to women.

¹ 147 women physicians (1955), i.e. 12%; 477 (out of 685) dentists are women (1955).

There is no restrictive legislation regarding women, but traditional and sex prejudice still exist to some extent. A few private undertakings dismiss their women employees on marriage, but on the whole the economic depression has not caused any change in the attitude of men towards business and professional women. Nor have any women been dismissed from employment so that the work may be given to men.

Girls and boys have equal educational opportunities. (At the State and Private Universities of Finland, 40 % of the students are female, at Technical Universities 10 % female, and at the Commercial Universities 25 % female.)

The liberal attitude of both men and women in Finland gave the Franchise and Eligibility to Parliament to Women 50 years ago, and in recent periods of development Women's Rights have gradually been recognized. (See appendix.)

The satisfactory economic situation of Finland and the growth of industry and trade since the independence of the country was obtained have increased the possibility for women to seek higher education and obtain employment in many new professions.
